Artist Statement

Ron Parker

“My objectives for painting vary, but most often, the objective is to depict the bird or animal in a natural and usually typical environment or situation. My ideas or concepts usually come from something I have seen while doing fieldwork or from an abstract composition.

In most paintings, I try to convey mood or feeling that will evoke an emotional response in the viewer. This may be almost entirely due to the rendering of the background of the painting and have a little to do with the species portrayed.

In most pieces, I also try to depict a scene from foreground to horizon to try and give depth to the appointing, although I also do paintings that are just segment of what could be a complete scene.”
